

■ From left, Bob Knight, former mayor of Wichita, KS; Allan Kullen, president of Todd Allan and the People of America Foundation; and Glenda Hood, Florida secretary of state and chair of the Partners for Livable Communities' executive committee, display the Bridge Builders Award.

Printing company employees help build bridges that unite community

Beltsville-based Todd Allan Printing Co., Inc., received a Bridge Builders Award in June from the D.C.-based Partners for Livable Communities, a nonprofit that promotes efforts to improve the quality of life, economy and social equity of communities.

Todd Allan employees donated time and resources to provide the People of America Foundation's program with editorial assistance, layout design, printing, Web-site creation and maintenance.

The award recognizes individuals and institutions committed to eliminating cross-cultural barriers in communities.

"By reaching across boundaries and building bridges, they exemplify the enterprise and enthusiasm that makes America great," says Glenda Hood, secretary of state for Florida and chair of the nonprofit's executive committee.

This news release is based on an article that appeared in the Washington Business Journal, August 20-26, 2004, page 39.